Best Playing Tips

Easy keys for making the most of every swing during every round
By T.J. Tomasi, Ph.D.

Cover The Ball Web Tip: See The Cover Drill In Action!
The golf swing is a complicated event, full of many moving parts and varying demands on your body at different points during the motion. A well-oiled swing flawlessly keeps all of these parts in order by synchronizing their movement, from takeaway to finish. Here's a great drill you can use on the course to synchronize your swing and create more powerful, more accurate golf shots.

Assume your address position with your club soled behind the ball. Then, keeping your clubhead in position, remove your target hand (the left for right-handers) from the handle and place it on the butt end of the club so that you can hold the club in position with that hand only. Now, simulate a golf swing using your right hand, allowing it to move to the top of your swing, then down to the ball until it moves under your front forearm through impact.

I call this drill the Cover Drill (Corey Pavin once used it as part of his preshot routine) because it forces the front shoulder to move upward through impact—just as it should—without spinning open. Thus, your shoulder covers the ball at impact and returns your arms back in front of you like they were at address

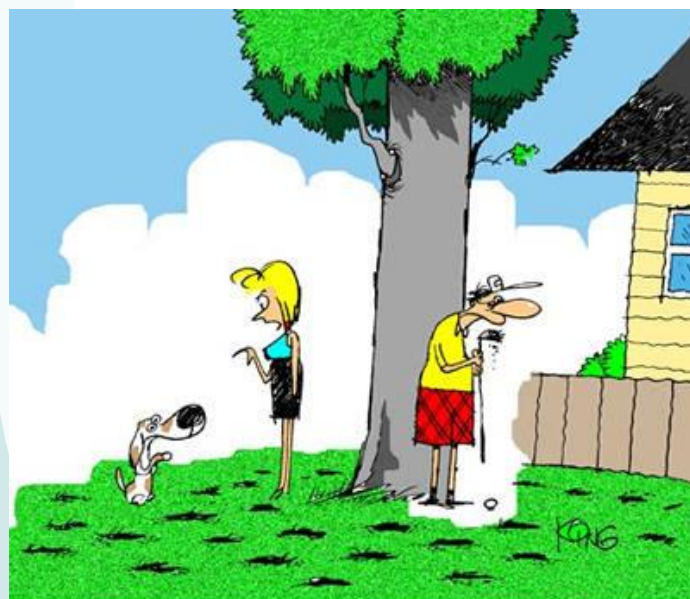

During the first round of the PGA European Tour's Alfred Dunhill Links Championship, David Howell teed off from in front of the tee markers on the 18th hole. Because Howell, 42, of England, made a stroke from outside the teeing ground, he was penalized two strokes in accordance with Rule 11-4b. He corrected his mistake and proceeded to complete the hole and his round.

When starting a hole, the Rules of Golf require that a shot be played within the teeing ground, which is defined as the area that is no more than two club-lengths in depth measured from the outer limits of the two tee markers.

When Howell accidentally teed his ball ahead of the front side of the tee markers on the 18th hole at St. Andrews, he could have corrected himself before making a stroke. Unfortunately, Howell did not notice the mistake and proceeded to hit his tee shot, resulting in him playing from outside the teeing ground. After he was notified by his caddie, Howell corrected the error by hitting again, this time from within the teeing ground.

My caddy noticed I'd teed up in front of tee marker on 18 today, 2 shot penalty, 1st day with me, honest as the day is long, #Integrity
